A Connecticut-based financial firm has relocated its headquarters to Dallas' Uptown neighborhood with plans to bring real estate investment to the apartment, office, retail and specialty properties in the region.

Revere Capital LLC has leased space on the 21st floor of 2000 McKinney Ave., an office tower near the new McKinney and Olive development.

The firm, which has 17 employees, originates and buys senior mortgages, second mortgages, mezzanine and debtor-in-possession loans throughout the United States.

This year, founder and principal Clark Briner said he expects Revere Capital to land business in the office, apartment and retail sectors in North Texas.

The Texas born and bred executive said Revere Capital decided to move to Dallas because of its central location in the nation, moderate cost of living and the business climate.

Prior to getting into real estate in 1997, Briner held several state and federal political positions. He has an MBA in finance from Southern Methodist University's Cox School of Business and a B.S. from Texas Tech.

Along with originating and buying loans, Revere Capital also underwrites investments on commercial real estate and corporate loans on heavy equipment, art lending and airplanes.

Dallas-Fort Worth has seen a number of relocations and company expansion in the region in recent years. Last year, North Texas absorbed a record level of office space as business boomed.
